Notes for ROBERT LOGAN KELLISON:

As the civil war was breaking out the Kellison family sit around a camp fire to decide which way to fight, they decided for the south.

When the civil war broke out Robert was 16 and too young to be drafted, but he felt he must get into the fight. After much trouble he talked 2 recruiting officers in to taking him to general Price of the confederate army, but before they got there they were captured by the union army. After joining them he was sent back to within 3 miles of his home. The first chance he got to take a horse and gun he went home. He spent much of his time hiding from the Yankees in hay stacks by day and many other places at night. He finally decided he couldn't stay in hiding all of the time, so he joined a band of raiders under a man named Quantrell.

After the war he went back to find his home and all of his possessions destroyed by the Yankees. He married Hannah Myers in 1865 and started gathering his relatives, the Baxter's, Greens, and the Myers, who were brother-in-laws and 2 cousins, Davidson's and Lawson's and made plans to come to Texas. The men went out at night gathering up teams, wagons and supplies left behind from the Yankees. Some time later they began their trip to Texas. Their route was through Springfield, Mo. through Eureka Springs, Ark to Fayetteville to Fort Smith to McALISTER, Ok. to Dennison, TX. Fort Worth and on to Meridian, TX. On the wagon of John Kellison was written Texas or Bust and after 2 years he added the word Busted and went back to Missouri. Robert Logan and his family stayed and then because of Addie's health they moved to Eureka Springs, where he got a job building the railroad. He didn't like this so he bought some merchandise, loaded it on a wagon and went around selling it. He returned to Meridian about 1885. In 1902 or 03 he moved to Harmon co. Ok. where he died in 1924.

This information came from Robert's son John Ragan Kellison.
